Slomka Campaign Releases Antidote to Strategic Voting Disease

“The emergence of strategic voting in the last week of the Kingston municipal election reflects an unhealthy understanding of how to build a great city,” said Mayoral candidate Brenda Slomka.

“You cannot build a healthy community with a vibrant democracy by encouraging voting based on fear. Strategic voting is voting for the “least worst” candidate so that another candidate does not win - this inevitably leads over time to deep political disappointment and mediocre governance.”

Fortunately there is an antidote for someone who catches strategic voting disease.

It involves the following procedure; imagine there were only two candidates in the race:

Brenda Slomka and Rick Downes; who would YOU vote for?

Then imagine: Brenda Slomka and Bryan Paterson, who would YOU vote for?

Then: Brenda Slomka and Dorothy Hector, who would YOU vote for?

Then: Brenda Slomka and Scott Foster, who would YOU vote for?

Then: Brenda Slomka and Michael Owens, who would YOU vote for?

Strategic voting disease is spread by people who don't vote for what they believe in.

“Take a stand; be courageous and vote for the Mayor you believe in. Share this antidote with your friends. This is the cure.

Let's choose the best leader for our city,” said Slomka.
